 RETURNLEGACY®

As we age, the most significant aging sign that we could see is the change of our skin especially on our face, it started to have wrinkles, dark spots and skin dryness. This is known as aging process. The primary culprits of skin aging are divided into two categories: intrinsic aging and extrinsic aging.

INTRINSIC AGING

Intrinsic aging, also known as the natural aging process, normally begins in the mid-twenties. During this period, collagen production will slow down, skin elasticity of skin will reduce and skin cell turnover will slightly decrease. The signs of intrinsic aging include fine wrinkles, skin thinning, loss of underlying fat, sagging and drying skin.

Age is not the only determining factor of aging skin. Environmental factors also play a central role.

EXTRINSIC AGING

Extrinsic or external factors often act together with the normal aging process to age our skin prematurely. These external factors include repetitive facial movement, sun exposure, gravity, sleeping positions, and smoking.

FACIAL MOVEMENT

Repetitive facial movement could lead to fine lines and wrinkles. This is because the movement of facial muscle could cause groove to form beneath the surface of the skin, which is why we will see fine lines on face with each facial expression. As skin ages and loses its elasticity, the skin stops springing back to its line-free state, and these grooves become permanently formed on the face as fine lines and wrinkles.

GRAVITY

Changes related to gravity become more pronounced with aging. When the skin elasticity declines in middle age, the effects of gravity become evident. Gravity causes the tip of the nose to droop, the ears to elongate, the eyelids to fall, the jowls to form, and the upper lip to disappear while the lower lip becomes more pronounced. You can't fight gravity, but there are other factors that you can control.

SLEEPING POSITION

Sleeping with face pressed down on pillow every night for years may lead to wrinkles. Sleep wrinkles become etched on the surface of the skin and no longer disappear.

SMOKING

Cigarette smoking could cause biochemical changes in the body that accelerate aging. People who smoke for several years tend to have deeply wrinkled and leathery skin.

SUN EXPOSURE

The exposure to ultraviolet (UV) ray from the sun over time could result in premature aging. This is because UV ray could penetrate the skin layers and damage the skin cells. The damaged skin cells could lead to the breakdown of elastin and collagen, which in turns lead to the appearance of wrinkles, sagging skin and pigmentation on face.
